

SUSAN DAICOFF is a Professor of Law at Florida Coastal School of Law in Jacksonville, Florida, teaching contracts, professional responsibility, and law as a healing profession. She has been researching, writing, and speaking since 1991 on the psychology of lawyers, lawyer personality, lawyer distress and dissatisfaction, the legal profession, professionalism, and ethical decision making by lawyers, culminating in her book, “Lawyer, Know Thyself,” which synthesized forty years of empirical research on lawyers= personality traits and lawyer wellbeing.

She has used this research to teach law students skills associated with “emotional intelligence.” Her current research interest is the A comprehensive law movement,” which encompasses therapeutic jurisprudence, preventive law, restorative justice, collaborative law, creative problem solving, holistic justice, procedural justice, transformative mediation, drug treatment courts, and others, and its potential to enhance lawyer wellbeing and the legal profession